

Belgium Honors Its Dead.
BRUSSELS, Nov. 2.—For the first time since the war, Belgians Saturday were allowed to commemorate the death of their fallen heroes. All Saints' Day was celebrated with great pomp in Brussels. Burgomaster Max deposited flowers on the graves of Belgians, Canadians, English, French and Russians. Wreaths were also deposited on the grave of van Campenhout, the composer of La Brabançonne, the national anthem.

25 CRASH VICTIMS AS TRAIN HITS BUS; 14 KILLED, 11 HURT

Difficult to Identify Masqueraders on Way to Week-End Party.

CLARKSBORO, N. J., Nov. 2.—The list of dead from the accident at this place when a Pennsylvania Railroad passenger train on the Salem Branch of the West Jersey and Seashore Railroad crashed into a motor bus containing thirty-six Philadelphia young men and women on their way to a week-end party at Billingsport, numbers fourteen to-day. There are eleven others in hospitals, two of whom, it is believed, cannot live.

According to survivors the train that bore down on them did not show a headlight and sounded no whistle of warning. The dead and injured were all in masquerade costume and "made up." Most of the men were dressed as women, and some of the latter wore sailor's clothing, making it extremely difficult to identify them. A few minutes before the accident Stephen Strodbyk of Clarksboro met the party several miles away, and they directed them to Billingsport. He directed them to two, and they selected the one that led to their deaths. He followed them, and a few moments later saw the train crash into the bus.

Some of the victims were thrown high in the air and buried in all directions. Others were carried along with the train for 400 feet with the bus, that had become lodged in the fender. The train left the tracks, and although the passengers were badly jolted none of them was injured.

The townspeople, who were quick to reach the scene, borrowed automobiles in which they took the dead to an improvised morgue and the living to Woodbury, where the latter were placed aboard a special train and rushed to hospitals in Camden and Philadelphia.

WAR NURSE CARES FOR THE INJURED.
Dr. Boston, the only physician in the village, ministered as best he could to those still alive, until the arrival of Coroner Elwood Dowds of Swedesboro. The two were assisted by Miss Anna Karna, a trained nurse from Philadelphia, who recently returned from France. She was visiting Dr. Dowds and while he and Dr. Boston began to minister to the injured, she gave them morphine injections to alleviate their pain.

It was many hours after the accident that the dead and injured were identified. Owing to their masquerades men were thought to be women, and women were thought to be men, until survivors of the survivors explained that the excursionists were on a "mummer party."

Coroner Dowds and the railroad company held independent investigations yesterday. It developed at the local inquiry that in the motor bus were sixteen kegs of beer and a quantity of whiskey. Although the railroad officials declared the locomotive whistle was blown and that its headlight was burning, other witnesses than the survivors declared the front of the locomotive was dark. Young Strodbyk asserted there were no lights on the engine and that if the whistle had been sounded he could not have failed to hear it.

The crossing is an open grade one, without gates or warning signals to announce the approach of a train. The Woodbury Pike, over which the bus was running, approaches the tracks at this point with unobstructed view.

Railroad men are inclined to believe the accident was due to merry-making on the truck and that the driver failed to see the train or take heed of the locomotive's whistle. There was a driving rain at the time and they said this might have had something to do with it.

At an early hour to-day twelve of the dead had been identified. They all were Philadelphians. They were: Harry Weizel, No. 3552 Randolph Street; Joseph Fugel, No. 2538 North Sixth Street; Thomas Connell, No. 3512 North Second Street; William De Witt, No. 229 South Broad Street; Edward Ohle, No. 3535 North Seventh Street; William Brohough, No. 3521 North Bodine Street; John Sandow, No. 3507 North Seventh Street; William Weeber, Second and Wishart Streets; August Friend, No. 3499 North Sixth Street; Emily Booth, No. 2704 North Hancock Street; Martha McAdams, No. 3431 North Orianna Street, and Cornelius Regan, No. 3413 North Third Street.
